We welcome the efforts of the presidency in the implementation of the Bolivarian Economic Agenda to boost the national economy through the construction of a people’s socialist economy. This agenda, which includes the development of the country’s productive sectors, such as agriculture, mining, information communication technologies, technology, military industry, tourism, water, electricity, education, health, environment and culture, aims to diversify the production apparatus and new sources of foreign exchange, exports, imports and new sources of foreign exchange.

As the Japan-Venezuela Association, we joined the efforts to support the country’s development and will continue to address the conditions the country is facing due to falling oil prices.

As a Board of Director of the Japan-Venezuela Association, I have been making efforts over the last 13 years to promote goodwill and friendship between the citizens of our two nations. I would like to extend our warmest felicitations on this historic day, and assure all our Venezuelan friends that the Japan-Venezuela Association is devoted to the strengthening of our bilateral relationship and the support of the Venezuelan people.}
